Corporate Social Responsibility and the Rustler Nigerian State: Rethinking the Role of Government and the Possibility of Corporate
Social Development in the Niger Delta

Dorcas Mwanza

Abstract: This paper contributes to the ongoing discourse on the role of government in corporate social responsibility (CSR) in developing countries. It examines the role of government in CSR in the Niger Delta region of Nigeria, a region characterized by high levels of poverty and unemployment. The paper argues that government intervention is necessary to create an enabling environment for CSR in the Niger Delta region. It also discusses the role of government in CSR in the Niger Delta region and the possibility of corporate social development in the Niger Delta region.
